Questions:

- What are the funds for?
 - Many of our research students expressed feeling a lot of pressure from mentors demanding data and experiments not working out, which affected their self-esteem and caused feelings of less self-worth and imposter syndrome. One of our labs has encouraging messages that students pin to their lab bulletin board. Students who saw this expressed the need for a bulletin board with encouraging messages and positive affirmations available to all people in our building to read. We request these funds to provide students with snacks as they use art to write their messages to others, which will be pinned to our common bulletin board. We believe that this will bring students together for an activity that will uplift the mood and motivation of all students, faculty, and staff who find themselves reading the messages students crafted at this activity. We believe that these messages will help connect students and relay that we are all in a very similar situation, but things will get better, and we will succeed in our goals
